

Jean Paul Gaultier is among a bevy of Australian and international designers who have collaborated with Target in its Designers For Target program.

While the price tag for the celebrated French designer's wares would usually include more zeros than your department store purchase, pieces in this range start from $10.

"Each and every time I visit Australia, I fall in love with the local culture and attitude towards fashion, and continually find inspiration in my surroundings," Jean Paul Gaultier said in a video interview for Target last year.

"I was in Australia for the exhibition I did last year in Melbourne. I was there and there was somebody from Target Australia who came and saw the exhibition and proposed the project."

Known for his playful designs, Jean Paul says the collaboration represents a "meeting point where it's Gaultier, but at the same time it's Target ..."

FASHION JEAN PAUL GAULTIER FOR TARGET

The eagerly anticipated range reflects Gaultier's usual sense of irreverence, giving fans of his signature styles plenty to sift through. There's also statement pieces such as leather jackets and leather vests.

Spanning clothing, shoes, homewares as well as baby and nursery items, there's more than 100 items in the range. Available to buy in-store and online, it's the ninth offering in the Designers for Target program, which has included past collaborations with celebrity designers such as Roberto Cavalli, Stella McCartney, Missoni and Dion Lee. Expect something special with this one, says Target Australia managing director Stuart Machin.

"Jean Paul Gaultier is a world-renowned designer who has made a mark in the fashion industry for celebrating creativity, diversity and individualism.

"This Jean Paul Gaultier range is something extra, extra special." ●
